REAL-TIME SOLUTIONS

When Is Customizing Your ERP Solution the Right Decision?

For the routine business processes performed within an organization, it is usually best for a company to match routine processes with the standard functionality of the ERP software. This proven implementation strategy reduces project time-lines and budgets enabling the company to get the most out of its ERP investment. However, most businesses have differentiating processes that are used by the company to gain market share, win customers or drive a more competitive business. When it comes to the differentiating or unique processes that give a company a competitive edge, matching these unique processes to the standard functionality of the ERP software is not the best strategy.

For the company's differentiating processes, NDS Systems large repository of ERP functionality and XEPHR tools are designed to cost-effectively construct and customize a company's business applications to support the unique needs of the business. The extensive functionality base and associated tools provide the means to add new code or redeploy and modify existing functionality quickly with limited coding. This capability also enables ongoing cost-effective enhancements and modifications to the company's ERP applications as the business changes and grows.

The fully integrated NDS Applications bring the power of an Oracle-based ERP system to all phases of a company's operation increasing utilization of all company resources. NDS Applications deliver robust and powerful features to an organization, from unmatched reporting to practically limitless configuration enabling the company to simplify and streamline its routine business processes.

Since the NDS-ERP is Oracle based, your company can take advantage of industry standard Oracle tools and data base technologies with which millions of data base administrators and developers are already familiar.
